

Allegra LaViola Gallery

179 East Broadway, New York NY 10002 917 463 3901
gallery@allegralaviola.com www.allegralaviola.com

Allison Gildersleeve and Erik Jeor

April 27 May 29, 2010

Opening reception: April 27, 2010 from 6-9PM

Allegra LaViola Gallery is pleased to present Allison Gildersleeve and Erik Jeor, a two-person show comprised of works on paper and canvas.

To enter the worlds of Allison Gildersleeve and Erik Jeor one must abandon a sense of gravity and time. Light pours from unlikely sources, and memory cannot be trusted. The beauty that lures one into the work is chilled by an edge of darkness, and though we pause to admire the scenery, we might not want to linger too long.

Allison Gildersleeve's paintings are deceptively alluring roads wind through bright clusters of trees, inviting us to pause and enjoy our surroundings. Beyond the branches we glimpse a house, as the pitch of a roof or edge of a window peeks through the woods. Though the house speaks of humans we never encounter a person, and the world remains veiled in a brilliant mystery. Gildersleeve paints a type of memory familiar to many, grasping at a time just beyond the edge of clarity a haunted space.

Erik Jeor's watercolors appear at first as luminous landscapes, occasionally ominous as the lightness trails into an ashen mist. Jeor, immersed from adolescence in the evangelical movement, is constantly threading the gap between the divine and ordinary, the natural and supernatural. His drive towards the sublime comes in the form of a tug of war between seemingly opposed forces. As viewers, we are drawn into this conflict as we follow through the puddled shadows and into the focused radiance.

It is interesting to note that Gildersleeve, an American with no Scandinavian ties, has had such a warm reception in Sweden, Jeor's homeland. In a country where light and dark are so important on a daily basis it seems fitting that these two artists have found their way towards a middle ground, where the shadows are numerous but kept at bay.

Gallery hours

Wednesday Saturday: 12-6PM
Sunday: 1-6PM

Upcoming

Off the Wall
Group Show